Today in Rochester.

This is the historic day on which the Hon. GEORGE WASHINGTON ALDRIDGE presents himself to his Monroe county neighbors as a candidate for public office. He is a boss, frankly and vehemently, of the political opinions that now find high favor throughout the country. He has a record that cannot be of assistance to him, but it is the result of his devotion to a machine that he hopes is capable of doing him a great deal of good.

There are many bosses who would not have selected a special election at this season to run for office on the Republican ticket. Just as there are many bosses who would not allow themselves to be put in the position of appealing for a popular endorsement. To-night we shall know whether Mr. ALDRIDGE has shown good judgment or mere foolishness in his bold effort to succeed Mr. PERKINS.

Even should Mr. ALDRIDGE be elected, and that by the usual plurality, the campaign has revealed a surprising vitality and a gratifying capacity for hard work among the Democrats. Monroe county was about the last place in the State where a vigorous, intelligent and honest canvass by the opposition party would have been expected. But a creditable candidate was chosen, his appeal to the voters was skillfully made, and he has won a triumph already in the rehabilitation of his party and the new life and hope he has put into it.

Too Willing Lenders.

Russia and England are apparently not alone in their generous offer of a loan to help Persia out of her present financial embarrassment. A representative of the Deutsche Bank, according to a Teheran despatch to the Vossische Zeitung, has been engaged in "studies and negotiations" in the Persian capital and has aroused the hopes of Persians in authority that the German financial world would not be indisposed to come to the assistance of the State in its need. "If adequate guarantees were offered and favorable concessions made."

The hope of cash advance has been an absorbing subject to the Persians ever since they accomplished their revolution. A joint loan was offered by Russia and England, but the Government and many members of the Parliament refused to accept it because they believed that the acceptance would place them still further under obligation to the two Powers that had already divided their country into spheres of influence. They then undertook to raise the necessary funds through taxation and the sale of the crown jewels.

It was at this juncture that the representative of the Deutsche Bank appeared and then followed the report of his offer. This bank is largely concerned in the Bagdad Railway and its representative, SYRUS REUTER, before arriving in Teheran, had made a journey over the Teheran-Khanikin-Bagdad route, the natural line of prolongation of the Bagdad Railway into Persia if such a scheme was contemplated. The London Times, commenting upon SYRUS REUTER'S mission, says:

"If he has been giving hints to Persians in authority that Germany is ready to lend financial assistance to the Persian State in its need, as the Berlin newspaper says he has, we may be confident that he has not been acting without the knowledge and the approbation of the German Foreign Office."

The Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Sir E. GRAY, when asked in the House of Commons if the Russian or British Governments would interpose any objections to the German loan, said that he could not define the Government attitude until the conditions of the loan were known. This called forth the following comment from the Vossische Zeitung:

"The circumstance that England and Russia have agreed in a convention to regard the south and the northern parts of Persia as their respective spheres of influence cannot possibly impose upon them the obligation to abstain from all financial operations in those spheres, and even if this convention could be allowed, the moral part of Persia remains free from the sphere of view of the Anglo-Russian convention."

All this discussion has, however, brought out the fact that even if Persia should wish to secure a loan from Germany upon the condition of "adequate" guarantees and favorable concessions, she is practically estopped from doing so. She cannot pledge her customs, for they are already pledged to England and Russia. In the matter of concessions she is restricted by her two great neighbors. She found herself years ago to Russia not to build railroads for a certain period. At the expiration of this covenant both England and Russia would look upon the granting of concessions as an unfriendly act if they were not considered in the matter.

If the Persian Parliament should, however, in a spirit of bravado grant the German financiers a concession that would lead to the building of a railway linking Teheran and Bagdad, Russia would suffer commercially as well as strategically. This would bring a new factor into Persian politics and the international rivalry from which Persia has been preserved for some time by the Anglo-Russian agreement would not only be revived but would become keener than ever.

Postal Savings Banks.

Actuated by considerations of political expediency, the Republican party included in its platform in 1908 specific approval of the postal savings bank system. President TAFT has given the scheme his personal support. Without these two influences Senate bill 5876 would now be reposing peacefully in a committee room pigeonhole.

The plan for postal savings banks excites about as much public interest and enthusiasm as does the scheme for prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in Hawaii. In fact the interest publicly shown has been in opposition to the measure rather than in approval of it. Scores of petitions have come from all parts of the country remonstrating against the passage of the bill, and few have been received urging its approval.

The bill was dragged through the Senate, where it encountered strong opposition, and it is an open question whether more than a few of the Senators who voted for it were really in favor of it. It was made a party measure and branded as one of the President's policies. On those grounds rather than because of belief in or approval of the bill passed, Washington despatches report that "a considerable majority of the members of the House committee having the bill in charge are opposed to any postal savings bank bill at all." All Washington news regarding the matter indicates grave doubt of the merit of the scheme, combined with a belief that the passage of the bill is little short of obligatory because of the President's personal advocacy of it and because of its indorsement by a platform constructed chiefly for political purposes.

These grounds are entirely insufficient if there is doubt of the wisdom of the scheme as a whole or of the wisdom of the form in which the bill can be passed.

The main feature of the discussion in the Senate and apparently the point of special difficulty in the House, is the use to be made of the money deposited with the Government through the medium of the post offices. There seems no doubt that the bill would have failed in the Senate if it had not definitely provided that the funds deposited be kept in the immediate neighborhood of their receipt by the Government. This obligatory localization of the fund is the essence of the measure. A bill providing for a nullification of the laws of gravity would be almost as sensible.

Most of the town and country banks in which the receipts of the post offices are to be deposited already have a surplus of loanable funds which they send to the larger financial centers because of insufficient local demand for loans. The Government deposits on which the banks must pay interest which they do not pay to their ordinary depositors will increase their surplus. It would therefore seem that such banks must either refuse to accept the interest bearing deposits or accept them and increase their deposits in the larger financial centers where money is wanted.

Only by a pure farce can it be claimed that the increased surplus, the deposits by the agents of the Government, is retained for local use and the increased remittances to financial centers made only from funds deposited by private customers. Such a proceeding would suggest the filling of a bucket with water from two distinct sources and a declaration that water taken from the bucket came solely from one of those sources. The constitutional authority for any such scheme as that proposed is flatly denied by many able authorities and seriously questioned by many others. The President himself is apparently uncertain regarding the constitutionality of the Senate bill, but a question of constitutionality does not at all disturb the few who insist on postal banks and compulsory localization of deposits.

A system of postal banks in this country is a scheme of potentially enormous proportions and of far reaching influences. The lack of detail and specification in the pending bill is alarming if not appalling. The bill provides that through its post offices the Government shall accept deposits on which there shall be paid 2 per cent. interest; shall immediately redeposit the funds so received with local banks, the banks to pay not less than 2 1/2 per cent. interest to the Government, and shall thus conduct an enterprise of vast but entirely unknown dimensions without knowing whether the difference between interest payment and interest charge will serve to cover the cost of administration and apparently with indifference to the possible effect of what may be a huge increase in the volume of money in circulation.

It is clear that the plan and provisions of the bill and its possible consequences are dangerously uncertain.

An International Match.

Just now the Hungarians are yelling at Colonel ROOSEVELT and Colonel ROOSEVELT is yelling at the Hungarians. There is probably not more than one Hungarian in every crowd who really knows anything about our ex-President, and in what or why his influence in American politics and society has been good, bad or indifferent.

As to the Colonel, we violate no confidence when we say that his knowledge about Hungary is almost exactly as great as the Hungarians' knowledge about him. But he yells quite as strenuously as the noblest Hungarian.

There is one test of true greatness which Mr. ROOSEVELT undoubtedly meets. He carries some of the childish attributes into mature years—and one of them is a wild, swooning passion for noise. He loves to yell.

The skull of a student of the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute at Troy was fractured by a pitched ball on Saturday and he died during the night; the following day a member of the Froeburg, Ill., baseball team was fatally injured by a thrown ball that struck him in the side, stopping his heart action. Baseball will claim other victims during the season, several victims no doubt, and the casualties will be set off against those incurred in football to convey the impression that the physical risk in football has been exaggerated, and that it is no more dangerous than the "national game."

It could be easily shown that thousands play baseball where hundreds play football, and that the serious casualties for which baseball is responsible are comparatively few. Moreover, a game could not be made safer by any change in the rules, as a sport it must be played at great speed and high tension, and now and then the swiftly pitched or thrown ball will kill. The case against football has been that it could be made safer by reducing mass plays and regulating tackling, and the rules committee recently endeavored to satisfy public sentiment in those respects.

No manly game can be played without risk to life and limb, the risk results inevitably from the trial of strength and speed that makes the sport exciting and therefore popular and desirable; but it can reasonably be asked that unnecessary danger shall be eliminated, and that is what has been asked of the makers of football, the rules committee.

Whatever methods are adopted for enforcing the liquor law, success is measured by the number of citizens who are rendered uncomfortable and deprived of what they consider an innocent pleasure.

The resolution to have a "safe and sane" celebration of Independence Day is spreading in various parts of the country.

JOHN ADAMS more than any other man has been responsible for the celebration of the day with explosives, but if JOHN ADAMS had dreamed of the vogue of the cannon firecracker and could have known of the advent of the tetanus disease, he would have been a different man. ## STEAMFITTERS' PAY.

The Union Demands Decided to Be Unreasonably High.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN:—Sir: Has any one noted in detail the striking steamfitters' proposed little contribution to "cost of living?"

These men, who are threatening to hold up building operations, want $5.00 for an eight hour day, also want "all pipes cut on the job." That is to say, instead of having the pipes and valves cut and soldered at the shop, and then brought to the job, they want to do it by hand in the building which is in process of erection, greatly increasing the cost.

The wages they demand are nearly four times the average wages of American workers. Even allowing for higher expenses in New York, they are above the average. If the union is successful, New York will be an open town with steady work for an army of 50,000 capable men could be recruited here in a month at $5.00 a day.

The exactions of the steamfitters and other members of the building trades add a measurable percentage to the cost of every dwelling, an increase which is passed on to the tenant. Every tenant in New York is already paying tribute to the building trades, and now they want to be directly charged to the high wages and excessive output of the steamfitters and other contractors. There is no trust which saves the other workers so much or so little as this.

If rent payers want to pay $5.00 a day to steamfitters, they ought to have the right to demand that the same money be paid to the other trades. Being only a renter myself and neither a landlord nor a contractor, I merely wish to know if they are going to increase the $5.00.

W. C. T. The Inquirer and the Postmaster. TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN:—Sir: Some persons myself included, have an unfortunate idea which compels us to use the influence side of the building trades. Every time the other day a most important, albeit very gentle man left at my home an examination paper after reading the questions, which my wife on seeing the paper, exclaimed: "What a waste of paper!"

For instance, to "Are you the head of the family?" Mr. Henpeck ought to answer: "Only in name. My relation to that individual, a most interesting word, is that of a head of a family. How old are you?" you might find it as well to take refuge in "You thought and answer."
